The National Enquiry Centre (NEC) is the entry point for all family law enquiries in the Family Court of Australia and the Federal Circuit Court of Australia.

The NEC can assist with:

- information about how to apply to court
- procedural information about your case
- general information about family law forms, fact sheets and other publications
- copies of divorce orders, and
- general information and help signing up to the Commonwealth Courts Portal, including eFiling.

Although staff are available to assist with a range of matters, they cannot give you legal advice. If you require legal advice, you should contact a lawyer through:

- legal aid
- a community legal centre, or
- a private law firm.

There are services available to help families deal with separation issues without going to court. If you are affected by family relationship or separation issues and do not have a case before the Court, call the Family Relationship Advice Line on 1 800 050 321 or visit familyrelationships.gov.au
